Linsay Willier is instantly recognizable from her recent appearance on Canada's Next Top Model. When asked about her six-week experience on the popular reality TV show, she says, "It was a lot of crazy work but my favourite part was the travel. We went to the Bahamas and New York City. The worst part? The lack of sleep. For the first two weeks we only had four hours of sleep a night!"

Willier slept three whole days to recover after returning home from earning the runner-up position.

In addition to her career in modeling, Willier has teamed up with So You Think You Can Dance Canada finalist, James Jones, to launch a company called Dreams in Motion. They act as motivational speakers using interactive performances to inspire youth.

→ Josh Martin & Sara Jonsson

He's from Toronto. She's from Victoria. "It's east coast," he starts, as she immediately finishes his sentence, "meets west coast." And they couldn't be happier with their first collaboration.

Hands down the most photographed creation of the evening is the hair and makeup by Josh Martin and Sara Jonsson. "This is originality at its fullest," says Martin as he tends proudly to the structured veil in his model's hair. The creation resembles two wide sides of a waterfall with streams of hair tumbling down in teased cascades.

"Our inspiration was to create something new that hasn't happened before," adds Jonsson. Having collaborated for the first time, the two are just beginning to make waves with their innovative vision.

← Jules Frkovich

Jules Frkovich of JFG Designs is a local Vancouver-based artisan who has been creating jewellery for five years. In addition to gold fill and sterling silver chains, Frkovich specializes in creations using Swarovski crystals. "I love the Swarovski for sparkle and shimmer," she says, "and my inspiration is simply to create a piece that suits someone's own individual style."

Frkovich's Fall 2010 collection is silver shade Swarovski crystal on sterling silver chain. Although the designs change each season, JFG's classic bestsellers for bridal or evening are shown here – a timeless long drop necklace with matching drop earrings and a cluster ring – all Swarovski, of course.
